How can I help you today?

Ask about extensions, special consideration, or equitable assessment arrangements.

I've got a timed quiz that I won't be able to complete on time, am I able to get an extension?

No. The context says extensions are for assessments with deadlines like assignments, essays and projects, but not for timed assessments such as tests, exams, quizzes or lab/practical assessments. For a timed quiz, you would need to apply for special consideration.

I've recently lost my job, is this a valid reason to apply for special consideration?

Yes — financial hardship can be a valid reason for special consideration if it involves sudden loss of employment or income.

The context lists financial hardship, such as sudden loss of employment or income as an eligible circumstance for special consideration. However, for a quiz, the context says extensions are not available for timed assessments like quizzes, so you would need to apply for special consideration instead.

You would need to submit:
- a personal statement
- supporting documentation
- within five working days after the assessment date

Applying does not guarantee it will be granted.

So my hard drive with my assignment stopped working and I didn't backup my work, will I be able to get an extension or special consideration?

Special consideration is available when unexpected circumstances outside your control affect your ability to complete an assessment.

Eligible circumstances include things like:
- unexpected short-term physical or mental health conditions
- difficult personal circumstances or significant emotional disturbance
- bereavement
- serious crime victimisation
- unavoidable employment, family, cultural, religious or elite sporting commitments
- severe disruption to living arrangements
- financial hardship, such as sudden loss of employment or income
- serious technical issues during an online assessment

You generally need to:
- submit a personal statement
- provide relevant formal, independent, verifiable supporting documentation
- apply within five working days after the assessment date or due date, unless late applications are accepted for compelling or compassionate reasons

Applying does not guarantee approval.

I've just booked my first appointment with ELS next week and I'm feeling nervous. Is there anything I need to bring or have ready before I go in?

Before your first ELS appointment, have these ready:

- Supporting documentation from a registered health practitioner that outlines your condition and how it affects your study
- An ELS registration form
- Be ready to talk about how your disability/condition

impacts your ability to take part in your studies

The context also recommends:
- booking with a GP, counsellor, psychiatrist, or another registered health practitioner as soon as you know you may need support
- bringing documentation from a professional who is registered with a recognised board and has expertise in your condition

If you're unsure whether your documentation is suitable, you can contact Student Connect.

I emailed my course coordinator three days ago asking for an extension and I've heard absolutely nothing back and the due date is tomorrow, what do I do now?

If you can't get a response from your teacher, contact your Program Manager. If you still don't hear back, contact ELS for assistance.

Having a hard time reading through journal articles for an assessment as I'm dyslexic, is there some kind of text-to-speech thing RMIT can set me up with?

RMIT says that when you register with Equitable Learning Services, they can help you access assistive software and tools, show you how it works, and discuss which technologies are most suitable for you.

For text-to-speech / screen-reading support, the context lists:
- Microsoft Edge Immersive Reader (PC) — reads text aloud and can improve reading comprehension
- Other popular tools:
  - Speechify
  - Natural Reader
  - Mac VoiceOver User Guide
- ZoomText for low vision or difficulty viewing computer screens
- JAWS for low vision or blind students

For dictation / speech-to-text, the context lists:

- Google Docs Editor / Voice typing
- Dictate in MS Word
- Inbuilt Apple Dictation tool (Mac)

If you need these supports for study or assessments, you should register with ELS and provide supporting documentation from a registered health practitioner.

My mate got flagged for plagiarism because he reused part of an assignment he wrote for a different course last year, does RMIT actually define that as plagiarism?

I couldn't find reliable information to answer that in my knowledge base. Could you rephrase or ask something more specific?

Who actually sets RMIT's official academic calendar each year? I'm trying to plan around census dates.

The University Secretary and Academic Registrar approves RMIT's annual Academic Calendar.

For census dates, the context doesn't say where to find them. I don't have that information from the provided context.

I missed a test because I was unwell, How long do I have to apply for special consideration? I have an EAA deferral thing in my plan.

For a missed timed assessment like a test, if you have an EAA for Scheduled Assessment Deferral, you must apply for special consideration before the scheduled assessment or within 5 working days after the missed assessment. Attach your ELP as supporting documentation.

In general, special consideration applications are normally made within five working days after the assessment date. Late applications may be accepted only with compelling or compassionate reasons and evidence.

My nan just passed away but I've got a group assignment due friday, can I even apply for an extension on something like this? How much extra time could I get?

I couldn't find reliable information to answer that in my knowledge base. Could you rephrase or ask something more specific?

My nan just passed away but I've got a group assignment due friday, can I even apply for an extension on something like this? How much extra time could I get?

Yes — bereavement is listed as a valid reason to apply for special consideration.

The context does not say how much extra time you would get for a group assignment. The outcome is decided case by case, and could include an extension, equivalent assessment, deferred assessment, or another arrangement.

You would need to:
- submit a personal statement
- provide supporting documentation for the bereavement
- apply within five working days after the due date, unless you have a late application with compelling or compassionate reasons

Applying does not guarantee approval.

I think my tutor marked me down assuming I plagiarised, very upset about this because I definitely didn't, how should I go about correcting this issue?

The context says students can demonstrate academic integrity by acknowledging the work of others and the re-use of original work.

If you believe a plagiarism allegation is mistaken, the context doesn't give a full correction process, but it does say:
- students can request a copy of a marked assessment if a review is sought and it hasn't been returned
- academic misconduct is handled under the Student Conduct Policy

I don't have the detailed procedure for correcting the allegation from the provided context.

The extensions adjustment is on my ELP, but the assignment brief also says to fill out the standard extension form, do I need to do both, or is my learning plan enough on its own

According to the provided context:

- If you have the EAA for Extensions in your ELP, your Learning Plan is the only evidence you need to provide.
- You may still need to fill out a form if your School requires it.
- You do not need to provide a medical certificate or any additional evidence for that extension request.
- If you can't get a response from your teacher, contact your Program Manager, and if needed, ELS.

So, the context says your ELP is sufficient as evidence, but the School may still require its own form.

My first ever uni exams are in about 5 weeks and I only just found out ELS exists because of my anxiety. Am I too late to register for exam adjustments, and what will they want from me?

To register with ELS for exam adjustments and anxiety support, you need:

- Supporting documentation from a treating health practitioner who is registered with a recognised professional body and has expertise in your condition
- An ELS registration form

The context says it's best to contact/register with ELS as early as possible, ideally at least six weeks before a major timed assessment or four weeks before your first assessment task. If you register after that, RMIT may not be able to provide the full range of assistance.

If you're unsure whether your documentation is suitable, you can contact ELS or Student Connect.

I've got four assignments this semester and ELS gave me the extensions adjustment on my ELP. I already used an extension on assignment 1, have I burned my one chance for the whole subject or can I still use it on assignment 2?

Yes — you can use it again for assignment 2.

The context says that if you have the ELP adjustment for Extensions, you can request one extension per assessment. So:
- Assignment 1: one extension
- Assignment 2: another extension, if needed

It is not limited to only one extension per subject/course, but you cannot request more than one extension for the same assessment.

Honestly I've been so stressed with uni lately that I'm barely sleeping and I think I need to talk to someone. I'm at City campus, is there a counselling service at RMIT and where could I see someone without paying a fortune?

I couldn't find reliable information to answer that in my knowledge base. Could you rephrase or ask something more specific?

Honestly I've been so stressed with uni lately that I'm barely sleeping and I think I need to talk to someone. I'm at City campus, is there a counselling service at RMIT and where could I see someone without paying a fortune?

Yes — the context says RMIT offers Counselling and Psychological Services, which provides free, confidential and professional short-term counselling for students experiencing issues like anxiety, depression and stress.

It also says Medical Hub @ RMIT (City campus) offers GP medical care with mixed/bulk-billing.

For getting help, the context points you to Student Connect and the broader Health, safety and wellbeing support services, but I don’t have the exact booking details or room/location from the provided context.

Results for my last semester still haven't come out and I'm freaking out. Who actually signs off on results and who decides when they get released?

The provided context says:

- The University Secretary and Academic Registrar is responsible for the schedule of grades and sets the schedules for timely submission of results, publication of results, and related results processes.

- Deans/Heads of School/Cluster Directors are responsible for submission of results for courses in line with the schedule.
- Course Assessment Committees review and approve results for courses.

So, the person who determines when semester results are released is the University Secretary and Academic Registrar. The actual course results are reviewed and approved by Course Assessment Committees.

I've got a major essay due Monday and my flatmate, who's registered with ELS and has extensions on his plan, is in the same boat. What's the longest extension I could get as a regular student compared to what he could ask for?

I couldn't find reliable information to answer that in my knowledge base. Could you rephrase or ask something more specific?

I've got a major essay due Monday and my flatmate, who's registered with ELS and has extensions on his plan, is in the same boat. What's the longest extension I could get as a regular student compared to what he could ask for?

For a regular student, the context says you can apply for an extension of up to 7 calendar days. If you need more than 7 days, you must apply for special consideration.

For a student with ELS Extensions in their ELP, the context says:
- the most common extension is 7 days
- you can apply for a longer period if needed, such as 10 days or 14 days
- more than 7 days may be considered under the ELP

- it is one extension per assessment

So, in comparison:
- Regular student: up to 7 days
- ELS with Extensions ELP: can request more than 7 days for an individual assessment, if justified

The context does not give a single fixed maximum for ELS extensions.

I'm in third year and have never needed ELS before, but my anxiety has gotten way worse this semester. Can I still sign up now even though I'm not a new student? I've also heard there's some cut-off before finals for changing adjustments, what's that about?

Yes — you can still register with ELS even if you're in third year and haven't used it before.

The context says:
- you can contact ELS at any time during your studies
- it's recommended you register as early as possible
- ideally at least 6 weeks before a major timed assessment or 4 weeks before your first assessment task
- if you register after that, RMIT may not be able to offer a full range of assistance

What they'll want from you:
- an ELS registration form
- supporting documentation from a treating health practitioner who is registered with a recognised professional body and has expertise in your condition

If you're unsure whether your documentation is suitable, contact ELS or Student Connect.

My ELP runs out at the end of this semester and I've also got a brand new tutor starting next term who knows nothing about my plan. What do I need to do about both?

If your ELP expires, the context says you can contact ELS to renew it. You may need to provide updated documentation showing your condition is ongoing and still affects your studies.

If you'll have a new tutor next term, the context says you should email your Equitable Learning Plan to new teaching staff throughout the academic year. Your plan is also sent to your School each semester, but it's still your responsibility to share it with new staff.

If you're concerned your plan isn't being followed, the context says to speak to your teachers first and, if needed, contact the ELS team immediately.

I'm registering with ELS and applying for special consideration at the same time, and my mum's friend, who's a registered psychologist, offered to write me one letter for both. Will that actually be accepted, and what does it need to include?

I got an email saying I'm 'at risk' of unsatisfactory academic progress and I'm panicking about being excluded. Who decides that, and if I narrowly fail my very last course, is there any chance of a supplementary assessment so I can still finish my degree?

The context says:

- Chairs of program assessment boards review student progress and determine the stage of unsatisfactory academic progress.
- If a student is at final stage, the board may recommend exclusion.
- Any decision to exclude a student is made by the Dean/Head of School/Cluster Director.
- The University Secretary and Academic Registrar then writes to the student advising of the exclusion and their right of appeal.

For a supplementary assessment:
- It can be approved by course assessment committees for courses in the school/industry cluster,
- Program Managers for courses delivered by another school/industry cluster,
- or program assessment boards where a student has narrowly failed one course in the last teaching period to complete their program.

So yes, if you narrowly fail your very last course, there may be a chance of a supplementary assessment, but it depends on approval by the relevant body.

I've got ADHD and I can never keep up taking notes in lectures, and typing out my essays is wrecking my wrists. Are there any free tools for recording classes and for dictating my writing instead of typing?

From the context, the free tools/services mentioned for lecture recording and dictation/speech-to-text are:

- Microsoft OneNote (PC) — for recording audio or video notes in class

- Otter AI — free basic version for recording and automatic transcription
- Google Docs Voice Typing — speech-to-text in Google Docs / Slides speaker notes
- MS Word Dictate — speech-to-text in Word
- Apple Dictation — built-in dictation on Mac

For study planning support, the context also mentions:

- Goblin Tools — especially useful for ADHD or task management
  - Magic ToDo
  - Judge
  - Formalizer
  - Estimator
  - Compiler

And it says that when you register with Equitable Learning Services, they can help you:
- discuss which technologies suit you
- help you access the software
- show you how it works
- suggest other helpful tools

If you want, I can also pull out the exact tool that best fits ADHD note-taking vs wrist pain from the context.

I've got a long-term illness and my GP reckons I should get an EAA for my exams. Does that mean my exams get made easier, and who actually decides what adjustments I end up with?

An EAA does not make your exam easier or lower the academic standard. It provides adjustments so you can do the assessment on a fairer basis.

From the context:
- Equitable Learning Services (ELS) assesses your needs and creates your Equitable Learning Plan (ELP).
- Your ELP may include adjustments like extra time, rest breaks, alternative formats, assistive technology, or a scribe.
- Course coordinators determine the final form of assessment for their courses, and it must take into account the recommended adjustments.

So, in short: ELS identifies the support you need, and the course area implements the assessment adjustment.

I've got a hurdle test next week and I've just ended up in hospital. I'm doing great in the rest of the subject, so what are my options, and does failing a hurdle really mean I fail the whole course even if my overall mark is fine?

Yes. The context says a hurdle assessment task is one you must pass to pass the course, and if you fail a hurdle, you fail the course regardless of the total mark you receive.

Given you've been hospitalised, your options from the context include applying for special consideration, which can result in outcomes such as:
- an equivalent assessment
- a deferred assessment
- an extension of time
- late course withdrawal without academic penalty

For special consideration, you need to provide formal, independent and verifiable supporting documentation showing the unexpected
